

Connecting people to experiences

Bus.com is simplifying the bus industry, and allowing groups to travel to the destinations and events they care about. Bus rental marketplace and rideshare company Bus.com has been successfully disrupting the North American charter bus industry, and gaining ground as one of the fastest growing Canadian startups.

By recognizing the opportunity to modernize an archaic system, Bus.com has built a new and easy to use online booking platform, which enables users to easily book and manage their group transportation.

“In what’s been known as a more traditional industry, we want to give customers a seamless booking experience more akin to the way you book other travel options like hotels, flights, and car rentals,” says Wolf Kohlberg, co-founder and Chief Logistics Officer at Bus.com.

By understanding the challenges both event planners and attendees experience with bus transportation, Bus.com has managed to create an easier way for groups to commute to the events and destinations that matter to them. In the past year, Bus.com has powered transportation to a wide variety of cultural events, such as March for Our Lives, Coachella, and the Special Olympics. The company is partnering with Collision to help attendees travel from the Enercare Center to Night Summit activities on Monday, May 20, 2019 with a shuttle program showcasing new branded buses.

Kyle Boulay, co-founder and CEO at Bus.com, states “We believe we can really change the way people plan and experience bus transportation. We’ve been learning everything we can about the frictions people from a wide variety of industries experience when booking buses, and we’re doubling down on solving them.”

With this shift towards a streamlined bus booking process, Bus.com will continue shaping the future of group travel by enabling and inspiring people to create meaningful group experiences.
