

Collision From Home Meets The Open Source World With Rocket.Chat In 2020

Named one of the best remote work platforms in 2020, Rocket.Chat joins the select group of startups redefining the communication industry at Collision From Home, in June.

São Paulo, June 5, 2020

The pandemic arrival anticipated challenges for businesses that weren't fully prepared for the remote world. The most prominent challenge is smartly managing business communications. As there are numerous software providers of emails, chat, social media, and live chat tools, companies use different channels to chat and a big part of messages sent is missed in the process.

"Ensuring data-privacy and quick communication became a major problem for companies in 2020. They have to ensure team accountability while quickly making decisions. In this scenario, productivity starts with downsizing the number of tools you use to communicate. Companies must centralize everything in a single, highly-secure platform", says Gabriel Engel, CEO and founder of Rocket.Chat .

By providing a comprehensive communication hub that centralizes conversations and respects data privacy, Rocket.Chat helps companies to overcome this major issue. Its numerous solutions, such as Omnichannel Customer Experience, Team Collaboration, and DevOps give companies control their communication, ensuring its compliance to data protection regulations.

At Collision From Home 2020, Rocket.Chat will present solutions to help customers improve their enterprise communications through Rocket.Chat's extensive knowledge within enterprise communication, team collaboration, customer experience, remote work, and open-source solutions for organizations looking for quality, flexibility, and affordability.
